Grand, Allen, and Orchard Sts., N. Y.

Advertisements with sensational headings embodying much that is attractive, but devoid of a strict adherence to promises, are somewhat analogous to those clouds in summer which, while threatening thunderbolts and terror, simply show in their development results not at all proportionate to the alarm their appearance causes, and, instead of a violent outpouring, give us but a passing and harmless wind. In matters of shopping, careful observers will acknowledge that uniformity is as preferable to spasmodic attempts to introduce "Special Sales," "Bargains," &c., as an even temper is to petulant sulks. For the following we solicit an examination. Each item, being truthfully described, carries with it the guarantee that every promise will be fulfilled to the letter. Whatever advantages the markets offer will find a representation at our house, and at such prices as will make even a long journey profitable.
